| 5. I'd need to think about this. MTA is a heavily piano oriented group. ASTA is more for strings. Most string teachers in CA are NOT trained to teach, period. It's hit or miss, depending on their personality, creativity, and their own training experiences. You also are not going to find master string teachers who are willing to work on a regular basis with "regular" folks teaching "out there." I am not convinced that many of these master teachers would be truly qualified anyway. Maybe it is possible to have some kind of seminar once in a while where we can bring our questions to very experienced teachers. I liked Jeanne Luedke from the Suzuki world but Suzuki is essentially martial arts applied to music and the kids play, for the most part, very mechanically. I could go on. I have a real lot of experience by now, I've seen a real lot and can help students very significantly but this is a culture where the adults don't seem able or willing to convince the kids that serious musical study isn't just for those headed to music as a profession. | Sat, Jan 2, 2010 3:14 PM | Find... |
